Happy spring to you all! With spring come signs of hope and new life – there’s more sunlight every day, the trees are sprouting new leaves, and each day there are new flowers to admire. I hope this is a time for you to be reminded that the darkness doesn’t last forever, and that along with life’s struggles and losses, there will also be times of growth and rebirth.

This past fall we were honored to offer a 10-week therapy group for adult survivors of childhood sexual abuse. The group was so successful that we offered a second cohort this winter/spring. This group has been a powerful place to experience the "both/and” of injury and healing, loss and rebirth. Members have talked about how hard it is to show up and do the work, yet how grateful they are for a safe place to heal with others who truly understand.

Since March, we’ve also been collaborating with Genesee Valley Psychology to offer monthly workshops to teach mindfulness, emotion regulation, distress tolerance, and interpersonal effectiveness skills. Participants leave with a greater understanding of how their minds and bodies work and with concrete tools to help them cope better. These two new offerings complement our ongoing services of mental health counseling and psychosocial support to individuals and couples via telehealth and in person at the Center.

I haven’t even touched on the work that’s happening in our Urban Youth Outreach! You can learn more about that on page 2. Please check out page 4 to read what current participants are saying about their experience here. There are no adequate words to describe how grateful we are for all of you who contribute in so many ways to make hope and healing possible. You contributions make a difference!

If you haven’t already done so, I invite you to sign up for our annual community education event. This year, we’ll learn how mindfulness and meditation can help us lower stress and show up more fully for ourselves and others. As always, it’s free and open to all. You’ll find more information, including how to register, on page 3.

With Deep Gratitude,

Amy Durkee

Violence is a public health problem that profoundly impacts the growth and development of many youth living in the Greater Rochester Area. The Spiritus Christi Urban Youth Outreach’s objective is to remove barriers that deny youth access to and delivery of the health and human resources necessary to ensure their successful transitioning from childhood to young adulthood.

According to the American Psychiatric Association, disadvantaged youth ages 16 – 25 years are particularly vulnerable to poor outcomes during this critical transitional phase of development. The youth in our program are disadvantaged not only by their lack of access to quality health care, but, also in relation to all 5 social determinants of health: 1.) economic stability; 2.) health care quality and access; 3.) education access and quality; 4.) neighborhood and built environment; and, 5.) social and community context. Their vulnerability is compounded by the causative relationship between disadvantage, trauma, physical and mental health problems, and criminal behavior.

Understanding that one of the strongest predictors of future violence for youth is surviving it, and that services to violence survivors are a critical component of violence prevention, our Urban Youth Outreach provides community-based, trauma-informed mental health counseling and clinical case management services to youth, ages 16-25 years, whose lives have been adversely impacted by violence at home and in their community. The youth in our program have past or current criminal justice involvement and/or are gun violence survivors who sustained paraplegic and quadriplegic spinal cord injuries secondary to a gunshot wound.

"The youth in our program are disadvantaged not only by their lack of access to quality health care, but, also in relation to all 5 social determinants of health."

Our program aims to leverage the protective factors and resilience of youth who are dealing with multiple factors impacting their development such as childhood trauma, community violence, poverty, and (for some) a disconnection from family, community, and culture. We know that when youth have experienced adversity in childhood, especially in communities challenged by toxic stress and trauma, this has both physical and emotional consequences. With our material and therapeutic support, youth expand their capacity to regulate their emotions, to problem-solve more effectively, and to develop life skills that can advance their personal, academic and employment goals.

Meditation for Stress Management
with Daniel Brottman

Everyone experiences stress. There are times when we can cope with the stress and thrive, and there are times when it seems overwhelming.

Our presenter, Daniel Brottman, has practiced mindfulness for over ten years and is a graduate of the Inward Bound Mindfulness Education Teacher Training Program.

Through the practice of mindfulness and guided meditation, Daniel will teach techniques to center ourselves and connect with our inner resources to reduce stress and the negative feelings stress introduces to our bodies and minds.

This is a free event open to the public. Register with the QR code on this flyer, at scmentalhealth.org, or call 585.325.1186

From Current Participants:
“You folks really listen. Not only my counselor but all the staff. I am scared of most people and this makes me reticent to even ask for help because I am afraid, because of trauma, that talking to others will get me hurt. All of you simply listen, and for me, that makes getting help possible at all. Thank you.”

“Everyone has been nothing but wonderful for me and my husband! Such an amazing group of people!”

“You all have been so kind and accommodating with me, and I feel like I’ve been able to learn and grow as a person with your support. I truly believe I wouldn’t be receiving any mental health care without your kind, caring staff, and your willingness to work with people no matter what circumstance they might be in.”
